SYNOPSIS

The scene of the play is laid in New York and on the rise of the curtain one sees the library of Cyrus Martin, head of the American Soap Trust. Mr. Martin has a son Rodney, who though gifted with the average amount of intelligence, has lived the life of a pleasure-seeking millionaire's son and never been called upon to use his education and knowledge in business life. The old man intends to develop his son and with the aid of his stenographer Miss Grayson, a plot is hatched whereby the boy is forced to go out and seek his own livelihood. Rodney is turned out of his father's house and resolves to go into business for himself. He decides to manufacture soap in opposition to the trust of which his father is the head. The second act sees the officers of the new soap company "THE 13 SOAP COMPANY" with Rodney Martin in the managerial chair. His father's stenographer, Miss Grayson, with whom Rod is deeply in love, is acting as secretary, and an old friend, Ambrose Peale is the advertising agent. From now on many startling and humorous incidents follow one another in quick order. The new firm goes in for extensive advertising in order to annoy the old man and force him to buy them out at a fancy figure. The money soon runs out and the new firm is "up against it". They are just on the point of quitting when unexpectedly a large order for soap arrives. Then they are stuck because they have no factory for the manufacture of the article. They try and buy soap from the old man, but he soon shuts down on them. Orders continue to arrive as they are at their wit's end to know how to fill them. At the same time Martin, Jr. is worried because he can't "get in" on this promising business concern. However, in the end a deal is made to the satisfaction of all concerned and all ends happily.
